History of Springs On East Side of Old Highway 40, Extending from Jordanelle Dam To Heber City, Utah

One Spring which comes out in the Timpanogos canal, above old Jordanelle Picnic Grove.

A Spring at Jordanelle.

A Spring at Heber Power Plant.

A Spring at Parley Probst Ranch.

The Burrows Spring, just south of the Pete Probst Home and just west of the old Highway 40, near the SE corner of Pete's home, with a white picket fence around it.

The Sessions Spring located west of present (2002 AD) Highway 40 and north of the old Pace and later John Barton Moulton home.

The Large London Spring.....known to the Ute and Shoshoni Indians for many years before Early Settlers came to it, in fall of 1858.

These very first settlers into Timpanogos Valley were:

Robert Broadhead family.

William Davidson family.

James Bailey Davis family.

That winter, they made and lived in a "wickiup," shaped into a teepee-like structure, using tree branches, with the butts placed in a circle and the tops coming together in the center at the top. Smaller branches were woven into these main standards, then mud was plastered all around the perimeter. It was large enough to house 30 people. The top was left open to allow the smoke out from the fire that was built on the ground, in the center of the hovel.

In the late fall, that year, the very first known caucasian child was born to the William Davidson's. They named her, Mary Timpanogos Davidson, in honor of the valley in which she was born. The end of that story is, that she thrived and grew and married a man by the name of Horn and lived her life in Southern California.
